A small table had been brought out into the center of the room, and on this rested a small teapot, one of the impossible blue kind, in which the laddes of two centuries agone delighted. A pair of cups and saucers to correspond and a box of cigarettes were the only other articles on the table.

A PENCIL PORTRAIT.

Mr. Wilde is a splendidly formed man of six feet or more in height. His head is large, almost ponderous, and well set on powerful shoulders. It is an undeniable fact that Mr. Wilde is most too fleshy. Helwore a tightly litting sack coat of brown velvet, vest of the same maternal, and loose trousers of a aubdued tint but of very self-assertive cut. His throat was encircled by a pale green tie, and the correr of a handkerchief to mating with the left hand somewhat wearisone.

"Will you explain to me your conception of free poetry?"

"The ensence of all art," said Mr. Wilde, "is a combination of perfect freedom with perfect beauty. If you ask me what attitude our school adopts toward poetry, I will tell you. A great deal of careless and bad work has been strutting about the world, sheltering itself under the name of inspiration. We dont care to discuss what inspiration may be, but we feel that it possibly belongs to a man's private life, and as a rule never appears in his work. We think that poetry is an art like the other arts, with rules and laws. A thing not to be kept as many young poets have for moments of deep depression, but an art dependent primarily on beautiful workmanship. A young poet, like a young painter, must study the great maters of style, and must be able to use language as a particular terms.

masset of the people; an art that will not be a luxury for the rich, but the atmosphere in which men and women are to grow up."

"How do you like America as far as you have become acquainted?" asked the reporter preparing to leave.

"To begin with, America is not a country; it is a world. Every city has different types and there is no permanent type at all as regards her men and women. I think the society delightful. I find New York brillant and cosmopolitan; Philadelphis, literary; Baltimore, pleasant; Washington Intellectual; Boston, more like Oxford than any city you have. The people in Chicago I found simple and strong, and without any foolish prejudices that have influenced East America. I found the audiences in Chicago very sympathetic, and it gives me a seuse of power to sway such large multitudes. It is grand. In fact, the side of your American civilization those of us in Europe who are watching your young republics are most interested in is not the East but the West. A sea of white shirt front, a silken cravat, white kids, and a rell of manuscript completed the ensemble. The lecture was earefully prepared, and in sections even powerful. Mr. Wilde's language is well chosen, although somewhat inclined to be flowery. Every part of the effort gave evidence that the lecturer is a man of innowmenty fine education and no ordinary amount of ability. But a meager sycopais of the lecture, which was somewhat over an hour is length, can be given.

For three weeks they have been battling, not only with the elements from above (as it has rained almost tion to dwellings, stock, and lands canno now be properly estimated. There have been innumerable breaks in the levees, and the ontlook for the fature is anything but hopeful. Cattle and hogs have been drowned by the hundreds, barns have been sweps away, and their contents wasted, mules and horses are suffacing, and the loss to planters by these misbaps cannot but have its effect in cramping their facilities for putting in the crop for the year. These conditions of affairs exist to an alarming extent in Crittenden, Lee, and Phillips counties, Arkansas, aud, in De Soto, Tunica, and Coshoms counties, Miss. These are the largest cotton-growing counties in the Mississippi Valley, and what is true of them is also true of others that have suffered in a similar manner.

Starvation is threatening many poor people, whose homes line the banks of the streams that have overflowed.
